

ABSTRACT

An input system for an electronic device comprises a plurality of two digit numeric codes representing characters or character strings. The code for a character string comprises a combination of the first digits from its component characters. Information is input into the electronic device by pressing combinations of keys corresponding to two digit codes on an input interface.